1. At a Soviet Army storage depot in Vienna-Freudenau, oil is received by train from the Austrian refineries and is run straight into 200-liter barrels. There are no storage tanks.
2. Only Soviets are employed at the depot, which always has sufficient empty barrels on hand to meet the capacity of the incoming trains. The tank car bills of lading are marked "Consigned to the Red Army".
3. The oil received at this depot is either a gas oil or a special winter oil with a solidification point of -20° C.
